The Last Lecture Thoughts

I think your childhood dreams are very important. Even if you do not reach them, the journey along the way does a lot to your character. In the video he talked about how he never made it to the NFL but did learn valuable lessons while playing football. Your role models also do teach you a lot. You don't necessarily have to meet them like the guy in the video did, but you can learn lessons. You learn leadership, honor, etc. He also goes into detail about brick walls. I think his point of view is very interesting on them. He thinks they show us how badly we want something and that they are not there to stop us, but test us. He also talks about how its not all about you, and how awesome it can feel to help others achieve their dreams. This video was a great video about not complaining and just working harder as well as trying to find the best in others and yourself. That if you lead a good life your dreams will come to you. I think this is a very valuable lesson. Its not always about the destination, but more about the journey.
